Elizabeth Hart, CDT, GRP, is Tremco Roofing's Sustainable Technologies Specialist for the company's Western Division. In this role, Elizabeth promotes environmental remediation and economic sustainability with the use of rooftop vegetation, water capture, photovoltaic energy and other sustainable roofing technologies. Her background working with the green building industry, organic agriculture, and federal government affairs merges into a unique understanding of the collaboration necessary to change the "nature" of urban rooftops.

Elizabeth is experienced in all phases of commercial, municipal and private vegetated roofing – from the promotion, conceptual design and specification through procurement, installation and maintenance. She works with architects, landscape designers, contractors and building owners to ensure each unique vegetated roofing system functions as intended. Her green roof projects include hospital and medical office buildings, K-12 and higher education facilities, municipal, private and residential buildings - and each one makes a difference to the building occupants, community and greater environment!

A founding and active member of Portland, Oregon's, GRiT (Green Roof info Think-tank), Elizabeth is devoted to re-vegetating urban areas and reaping all the benefits to the environment, economy and society that come with it. Elizabeth received her B.S. in Sustainable Development and Biology, with a concentration in phyto-remediation (the use of green plants to clean polluted air, water and soil). She is a certified Construction Document Technologist (Construction Specifiers Institute) and an accredited Green Roof Professional (Green Roofs for Healthy Cities).

She enjoys presenting continuing education courses for the American Institute of Architects and other institutions on sustainable roofing solutions, and also participates with the following organizations: Cascadia USGBC, CSI, AIA, GRHC, Women In Government Relations, Hands on
